IFAW Animal Action Week Plastic Waste Art Competition

Every year as part of IFAW Animal Action Week we encourage you to enter our art competition.

This year we're setting a challenge with a real difference. We want you to design an art work made from plastic waste. It could be a picture, a model or a sculpture - the only proviso must be that it is made from plastic waste.

So now's the time to get your school collecting all those plastic bags, bottle tops, straws and widgets that usually find their way into the bin, or litter your school and its surrounds.

We want you to make something beautiful and creative, from something destructive and ugly - plastic waste.

Each work of art must be given a name, and will highlight the dreadful impact plastic waste has on the marine environment.

IFAW works with a wide variety of marine animals, including whales, seals, polar bears, sharks, porpoises, seabirds and turtles - all of these creatures are negatively affected by plastic waste.

You can also find out more about the marine wildlife IFAW helps to save by logging onto to the website at HYPERLINK "http://www.ifaw.org" www.ifaw.org, where there are plenty of pictures.

The most inventive and innovative Plastic Waste artworks will receive a limited edition animal print by famous cetacean (whale) artist Noel Ashton and a selection of the winning entries will go on display to help build awareness of plastic pollution.

To enter, fill in this form and send it to the address below with your entry attached.

Closing date for the competition is December 31st, 2008.
